WASHING rON -- The National Endowment for the Arts today released the program-by-program allocations for its FY 95 budget, reflecting a Congressionally mandated $2.9 million cut below the previous fiscal year.

The $167.358 million appropriations for FY 95, down from $170.228 in FY 94, includes cuts within nearly all of the Endowment's programs, including a reduction in its formula-driven funding to state and regional arts organizations.

The FY 95 figures include $400,000 in funding for Arts for Youth, which was appropriated by Congress to support a range of education activities, particularly those for "at-risk" youth, through existing programs. For example, funding for the Writers Corps, the partnership initiative with the National Service Corporation and Associated Writing Programs that is supporting residencies for 60 writers to work with inner-city communities in the Bronx, San Francisco and Washington, D.C., will utilize Arts for Youth funds through the Local Arts Agencies Program.

Two programs show an increase from the previous year. The $79,000 rise in the budget for the Visual Arts Program is due to the transfer of the Artists Communities category from the Presenting Program. The Folk and Traditional Arts Program increased by $42,000.

The agency's administrative budget, due to the replacement of outdated computer equipment as well as government-wide increases to cover rising rent, salaries, and costs for goods and services, rose by $1.28 million.

Last week, the Endowment announced that it was suspending indefinitely seven categories within the Media Arts, Music and Presenting Programs because of the budget cuts. The attached figures reflect those suspensions effective in FY 95, with additional adjustments. Those effective in FY 96 will be reflected then.

The Arts Endowment has been forced to suspend a total of 27 categories since the 1990 fiscal year. A listing of those categories is available upon request.
