ARTS FESTIVAL ON THE MOVE
Plans for the Rhode Island Arts Festival are fast falling into place through the concentrated efforts of the new Arts Festival committee under President Ormston C. Aldred. The Festival will open in Providence on Sunday, May 26th and continue through Sunday, June 9th and will feature some exciting new categories of exhibits. This year it will be an "underground" festival as it will be housed in the Francis Street underpass below the Union Station parking deck in Kennedy Plaza. Needless to say, the area will be scrubbed and gaily decorated.

In addition to Mr. Aldred, the Arts Festival's new board of directors is composed of Mrs. John C. A. Watkins, Messrs. Henry C. Hart, Jr., Carl Henry, Russell Fox, Richard Godfrey, Pierre Kleykamp, Leighton D. Anther, Charles Edwards, Francis Sargent, Everett Picchiene, Miss Marion Johnson, and David B. Gray, Exec. Director.

Looking Glass will also sponsor an open house in the Casino at Roger Williams Park on March 10th which will provide art activities for the family. The company will have folksingers and a workshop performance during the open house from 2:30 till 4:00 p.m.

TRINITY SQUARE REPERTORY COMPANY PREMIERES NEW PLAY ABOUT OSCAR WILDE
Highlighting the Trinity Square Repertory Company's Fifth Season is the current world premiere production of "Years of the Locust", a new play about Oscar Wilde by British playwright Norman Holland. Now at the Trinity Square Playhouse, the new play opened February 8 and will continue for four weeks, through March 2. Directed by Trinity's Artistic Director, Adrian Hall, the demanding central role of Oscar Wilde is portrayed by Richard Kneeland, a popular member of the Trinity Acting Company.

SOUTH COUNTY ART ASSOCIATION HAS ACTIVE SCHEDULE AHEAD
One of Rhode Island's really fine small galleries is housed in an 18th century white house which stands with quiet dignity on the main street of Kingston, in close proximity to the campus of the University of Rhode Island, Helme House, and its owner, the South County Art Association.

The Art Association came into existence as early as 1929 when John W. Dawson of Wickford moved to bring the loose association he had with the many artists in the area into a more permanent framework. Throughout the thirties, exhibitions were held and more and more widely attended; then in 1944, the Association received the regal gift of historic Helme House and an endowment of $50,000. The South County Art Association had a firm start, a home of artistic stature, and high hopes for the future. These hopes were not in vain. Within the past 10 years, the Association has remodelled the interior of its home and built its membership to upwards of 250 persons. Its active program now includes approximately twelve exhibitions each season, art classes on Monday evenings, lecture-demonstrations, and art sales. In April the Association will conduct its Second Annual Open Show, a juried competition, and next summer it expects to hold its first Art Workshop with six weeks of outdoor classes. During exhibitions Helme House is open from three to five o'clock, seven days a week and other time.

on appointment. Mrs. Robert Lepper is this year's dynamic president of the Association.
The next exhibition will open on February 18th with paintings and drawings of Pearl March, an artist member, and enameling by Donald Andrick of Worcester. On opening day Mr. Andrick will lecture and demonstrate the art of enamel on copper.
Membership in the Association, according to Mrs. Lepper, is at present about two-thirds artist members (annual dues $2.00, membership confirmation depending upon approval of art works submitted) and one third social members with annual dues of $5.00.
The five-member program committee, presently under the enthusiastic leadership of Raymond Finelli of Warwick sets up the yearly exhibition schedule and all hanging is done by the volunteer efforts of two artist members, presently Sylvia Petrie of Kingston and Paul Abell of the University.
To the outsider observing for an afternoon, the South County Art Association seems to be a thriving and imaginative institution which has its purpose firmly in mind, a solid financial stability and a large number of really involved and eager members. Rhode Island will no doubt be quick to respond to the opportunity to show art in the South County Annual — the open, all-media show to be held at Helme House from April 11 through 28th. Mrs. Lepper has announced that the entry fee will be $1.00 and that it will be a jury hanging. The setting for the show will be worth seeing and the exhibition itself will be, like its sponsors, fresh and interesting.

TRINITY SQUARE REPERTORY COMPANY
TOURING PROGRAM FOR PROJECT DISCOVERY
As an extension of Project Discovery, 1968, the Trinity Square Repertory Company will present a program of two one-act plays and selected excerpts which will tour the schools in Rhode Island as part of the in-school demonstration unit, under the artistic supervision of Adrian Hall.
Performed by members of the Trinity Square Resident Acting Company, the program includes “The Marriage Proposal”, by Russia's Anton Chekhov, “Man With a Flower in His Mouth”, by Italian dramatist Luigi Pirandello, various selections from Edgar Lee Masters’ “Spoon River Anthology”, and the “Lucy Song” from the Brecht-Weill musical, “The Threepenny Opera”.
The first performance of the touring program was a “preview” held at St. Clare High School and Mt. Charles Academy in Woonsocket, January 17. A special preview of the program for teachers, superintendents, principals, and the Board of Trustees of the Trinity Square Repertory Company was held on Saturday, January 20 at the Trinity Square Playhouse.
Available to the high schools in Rhode Island at no cost, the tour is being coordinated through Rose Valley of the Project Discovery office and Richard Cumming, Director of Educational Services for Trinity Square.

More than 1,100 boys and girls of elementary school age attended the second performance in the Children's Theatre Series sponsored by the Jewish Community Center of Rhode Island on Sunday, January 21.
‘Children's Theatre International’ presented “Petey and the Pogo Stick”, a contemporary musical fantasy about the world's first “pogonaut”. The young audience was fascinated by the ingenious sets and the “quick change” scenes which transported the actors around the world and to outer space. The Children's Theatre Series sponsored by the Jewish Community Center is Rhode Island’s pioneer program in live theatre entertainment for children. The importance of the educational value of theatre for children is being recognized now more often than ever. The Jewish Community Center hopes to stimulate the child's mind and imagination by exposing him to the best possible live professional theatre for children. It is hoped that these early experiences will help develop the audience of the future and be the start of a lifetime of theatre going.
The final presentation of the series will be the “Legend of Sleepy Hollow”. All performances are held at Nathan Bishop Auditorium. Admission is by season tickets only, and the series is completely sold out.

NEWS FROM THE RHODE ISLAND PHILHARMONIC ORCHESTRA

On April 6, the orchestra is looking forward to the return of Gina Bachauer, one of the world's most distinguished pianists. This will mark Miss Bauchauer's third appearance with the Philharmonic. The Rhode Island Philharmonic Orchestra and the Federated Fund for the Arts have begun separate fund-raising drives. In answer to the question “why two drives?”, the Philharmonic here presents the following facts:

The summer of 1966 brought an event rich in meaning to the Rhode Island Philharmonic Orchestra and to the people of our State. In recognition of the quality and quantity of the Orchestra’s activities over the last 22 years, and in consideration of its significant plans for the future, the Ford Foundation offered this musical organization a challenging grant of $500,000. The offer was accepted. The terms of the challenge were specific and firm:

1) By June 1971 the Philharmonic must have raised $350,000 to match Ford monies on a dollar-for-dollar basis. When this is accomplished the orchestra will have a $700,000 endowment fund.

2) The orchestra must maintain its annual Sustaining Fund and raise a minimum of $63,000. each year toward current expenses. The $63,000 figure was specifically stated in the Ford requirement. The amount named was based on the Foundation’s study of the community’s past giving to the orchestra.

3) If the orchestra fails to meet the conditions specified in the Grant notification, Grant funds shall be returned to the Foundation or redistributed by the Trust.

In accepting the terms of the grant, the orchestra furthermore took on the obligation of working toward a steady improvement in the quality of performances and an increase in services to the people of Rhode Island. New programs are already in effect, others will be put into action as rapidly as available funds permit.

In undertaking these additional artistic and financial obligations, the Board of Directors of the Rhode Island Philharmonic is fully aware of the problems they involve, but it is also aware of the many benefits that can result. It is certainly in the best New England tradition to make certain that funds which can be ours do not slip away.

Faced with this challenge and the burdens which accompany it, the following factors were taken into account:

1. It would be unfair to the participants of the Federated Fund, an organization only in its second year, to assume the responsibility of guaranteeing the orchestra a minimum of $63,000.

2. The orchestra will have to continue its Ford matching fund appeal until $350,000 has been raised. It would further confuse the public and campaign workers if the orchestra were to join the Federated Fund for its annual appeal while simultaneously conducting the Ford Challenge.

3. When the orchestra approaches the final phase of the Ford Challenge (please remember, the offer does not terminate until June 30, 1971), special money raising projects may be necessary.

In one sense, it was an unhappy coincidence that the first year of the Ford Challenge and the first year of the Federated Fund happened simultaneously. Certainly it is vital for Rhode Islanders to support both causes.

Mr. Marsden will use a theme taken from a group submitted by students of the English Department; thus showing the creativity developed in both media.

For the second year Mr. Myles Marsden is instructing a group of students at the University of Rhode Island in Kingston. This is a course taken for credit and the newly formed University
