The National Conference of Governors, meeting in New Orleans, in June, 1975, adopted a resolution concerned with the development of the Arts and introduced by Utah Governor Calvin Rampton. It said in part:

"State governments should recognize the arts as requirements for increasing the quality of life in America and work to provide all their citizens with additional artistic experiences..."

"States should be encouraged to pledge increased support for state arts agencies in their efforts to bring the arts to the people."

Where are the Humanities in this resolution? They are not mentioned because they have not been involved with State governments and state officials.
The United States Conference of Mayors in the same year, 1975, adopted a resolution which said in part that

"Every city be encouraged to establish a public agency specifically concerned with the arts..."

Is there a similar statement in behalf of the Humanities?
