Whereas, Michael Sullivan was elected as Chair of the Faculty Senate in early 2016, serving in that capacity from May of 2016 to May 2017, and

Whereas, he has overseen and facilitated the Faculty Senate's move to a more intimate space in the Beaupre Center and has created a special education session on procedure for new senators, facilitating greater participation among all senators, and

Whereas, he has shown tremendous care in approaching all charges given the Executive Committee by senators, ensuring the committee provided the information the senate needed to deliberate on difficult issues, and

Whereas, he has gone above and beyond the call of duty in serving not only as chair of the Faculty Senate, but also as chair of the General Education Committee and the Curricular Affairs Committee, and

Whereas, he has, as a new grandfather, shown almost superhuman restraint in his sharing of social media, now,

Therefore be it resolved, that the University of Rhode Island Faculty Senate thanks Chairperson Sullivan for his outstanding service to the University and wishes him well in all his future endeavors.

Vice Chairperson Conley asked for a motion to approve. A motion was made, seconded, and the resolution approved.

5. REPORTS OF STANDING, JOINT, AND SPECIAL COMMITTEES

A. Professor Romanow presented the Report of the Undergraduate Academic Advising Committee (UAAC). She summarized the activity of two subcommittees. The advisor support and training subcommittee continued to offer a voluntary Master Advisor Education program intended to provide opportunities for faculty to learn how to help students navigate the University and their academic plans and to allow faculty to reward students with financial need. Twenty-two advisors have completed the program since the Fall 2015 launch. Faculty members received a letter of recognition upon completion and students of their choice were awarded $500.00 each in scholarship funds from the Provost's Office. The UAAC planned to market the Master Advisor Program to increase participation. Professor Romanow reported that the Models and Practices /Workload subcommittee had designed a survey to obtain information on the current status of advising across colleges. The survey was distributed to department chairs and deans in order to better understand the current advising models in use and what resources might be needed to improve advising. The survey was emailed in Spring 2016 and repeated in Fall 2017. A total of 15 responses was received, 8 of which were from departments in the College of Arts & Sciences. The subcommittee considered the data useful and planned, for next year, a project that would incorporate students' advising experiences into the results. The goal would be to build a knowledge base of how advising is functioning from the multiple perspectives of all users of the advising system. Professor Romanow commented that there had been 7 vacancies on the UAAC during the 2016-17 academic year and expressed hope that, next year, the Committee would have full faculty membership in order to best represent the advising needs and concerns across the University.

B. Director Goldsmith presented the annual Report of the Joint Committee on Online and Distance Learning. She summarized the Committee's work: the successful move to Longsight as the SAKAI host, plans to execute new Sakai enhancements in August 2017, improved accessibility of online classes for all students (captioning), expanding the number of faculty subscribed to and using the SAKAI listserv, expanded online program enrollments, and continuing professional development opportunities. Director Goldsmith answered questions.
