[Frontispiece: "A House in the West."]

Oh, I give a house to the far-off West:

The hills are green and gold.

When the wild birds cheat their drowsy noon;

That house in the West, the sun shines golden.

And查明 the world with its golden noon.

Oh, I give a house to the far-off West,

I give a house to the far-off West;

Where beauty basks on the summer breeze;

Oh, I give a house to the far-off West;

And beauty in the West, the sun shines golden.

Oh, I give a house to the far-off West,

Oh, I give a house to the far-off West;

Oh, I give a house to the far-off West,

Oh, I give a house to the far-off West;

Oh, I give a house to the far-off West.

Something for Children.

There are a great many good children;

One in a while we meet those who

Stay with us no longer than they must.

They are not the ones who

Stay with us no longer than they must.

They are not the ones who

Stay with us no longer than they must.

They are not the ones who

Stay with us no longer than they must.

They are not the ones who

Stay with us no longer than they must.

They are not the ones who

Stay with us no longer than they must.

They are not the ones who

Stay with us no longer than they must.

They are not the ones who

Stay with us no longer than they must.

I DON'T RECOGNIZE HER—SHE'S A WORKING GIRL.

Was the explanation of a part of a speech made by the Quakeress, as she passed through my office, yesterday afternoon. The statement was from the Quakeress's own lips. She was very much impressed with the idea that the Quakeress was a working girl. She was trying to make her apprehend the idea, but the Quakeress was not inclined to accept the idea. She said that the Quakeress was a working girl, and that she was a working girl in a different sense. She was trying to make her understand that the Quakeress was a working girl, and that she was a working girl in a different sense.

The Quakeress was a working girl in a different sense. She was trying to make her understand that the Quakeress was a working girl, and that she was a working girl in a different sense.

This document appears to be a advertisement for Wistars's Wild Cherry Balsam. It seems to be a promotional piece, urging readers to purchase the product for its medicinal properties.

The text mentions that Wistars's Wild Cherry Balsam can be used to relieve bronchial and throat diseases, and it is emphasized that the product is safe for all ages and can be used by the elderly as well.

Additionally, the advertisement expresses concern for the well-being of the American people, indicating that Wistars's Wild Cherry Balsam is a cure for many of the ailments of the time, particularly those related to the cold and flu season.

The language is descriptive and persuasive, aiming to create a sense of urgency and trust in the product to encourage its purchase.

Despite the historical context, the advertisement still resonates with themes of health and well-being, which remain relevant today.

In conclusion, the document is a clear example of how advertising has evolved over time, from simple product descriptions to more persuasive and emotional appeal strategies.

"FORMODEMNA."--

In all ages of the world, the value of the truth has been appreciated, and not a little is it essential to be preserved, not only to maintain it, but to advance it, and to keep it in refreshing remembrance of its purity and perfection.

In the "FORMODEMNA,"--which will be published in the volume of the year 1860,--we shall give its full and complete history, and the position of Scriptural Religion, the Mother of all Truths.

As long as the human heart is the seat of affection and love, as long as there is life, there will be a need for the "FORMODEMNA,"--which will be published in the volume of the year 1860,--we shall give its to the world.
