This face-to-face course looks at issues of inclusion and diversity. Students will complete a limited amount of research and a few assignments using journal articles held in the library collection. The library holds all three journals listed as essential on the LIS request form. There are no optional resources listed. As it's heavily focused on current issues, the course also relies on freely available media and internet resources.

On the syllabus, I would recommend including the Libraries' contact information for research help, including email and virtual help. That information can be found here: https://web.uri.edu/library/help/reference-research-help/

In my capacity as subject selector for Psychology, I conclude that the URI Libraries can fully support this course.
