b. Proposed Alternative to Thesis Requirement in the Master of Community Planning Program (Non-Thesis Option)

The Curriculum requests approval for provision of an independent terminal project and written examination as an alternative requirement to the thesis and its defense which is presently required by the department. This constitutes a major change in the presently approved program of study for the Master's degree in Community Planning. The change would permit a student to choose between doing a thesis and presenting an oral defense of it, and doing a major terminal project and taking a written examination on the field of planning. (Programs without thesis - See Graduate Student Manual Section 7.45) In all other respects the student's program of study would remain the same. The reason for requesting the change is that in the field of planning, there is a range of problems whose statement, exploration, analysis and solution cannot be as productively undertaken under the thesis format as under another equally rigorous methodology and format of presentation. To implement the program change would require approval of the new course, CPL 589.

Master's Project.

The purpose of the project is to permit planning students to undertake a substantial terminal project, during the third and fourth semester of their study, which is concerned with an issue or activity in the professional field of planning. A Master's project is defined as a substantial, self-directed research project involving significant independent effort. Such projects could include, among others, design projects, drafting of planning legislation, development of plans or conceptual research. All the above-mentioned possibilities are well suited to the kind of work a planner will be expected to do in the practice of the profession. The projects in question may be simulated or involve the participation of a community group engaged in the activity under study. Such projects may not involve work for compensation, unless the student is employed by a planning organization and the research is over and beyond that work required by the employment. A final review of the project will be conducted by the major professor and participating faculty members or professional planners. The major professor may decide with the student(s) whether or not an oral presentation of the project shall be made. Six units of credit will be given for an accepted Master's Project. The credits are to be awarded after the Project's review and its acceptance by the Major Professor who will approve on a pass-fail basis.

Written Examination.

A written examination administered by the Director will be required of those students electing to carry on a Master's Project Research. It will inquire into the basic knowledge of the student in the field of planning. It will follow the examination given by the American Institute of Planners, and at present consists of three question areas. The examination answers will be reviewed by three CPAD faculty members. The examination must be approved by two of the reviewers for acceptance.

The Graduate Council approved this non thesis option to the MCP degree with the stipulation that after the first year of operation a review be made by the Graduate Council. This proposal satisfies the requirements for programs without theses (Graduate Student Manual 7.45) which requires a minimum of thirty credits in course work including at least one course that requires a substantial paper involving significant independent study (7.45.1) and a written examination prepared and administered by the department chairman in conjunction with a departmental committee designated for this purpose or with the major professor (7.45.2)
