Course: Film 206 – History of Film III

This course seems to be a natural development of the film curriculum: (from the syllabus) “FLM 206 (4 credits) is designed as an overview of significant national and international trends in the history of film from approximately 2000 until the present day. The emphasis will be on significant cinematic movements, the key players and films within those movements, and the larger social and historical context in which these movements occurred. Through screenings, readings, and class discussions we will develop an appreciation for and critical insight into the history, politics, aesthetics, and philosophical debates that shaped these cinematic traditions.”

It should be understood that the URI Libraries are able to add whatever appropriate monographic needs may arise for the instructor(s) and students of this course, but we cannot add any new journal titles except through a drop/add policy that requires the department to identify a journal title (of equal value) that it would like to drop from its serials list to permit the addition of another.

Our monographic holdings in Film Studies are excellent and will meet the requirements of this course. The critical journals and electronic resources that the University Library currently holds will more than suffice for this course. All that said, we are able to support this course bibliographically.

If bibliographic instruction is required for this course, the instructor for the course should contact our information literacy specialists through the Information and Research Help Desk at 874-2653 to make arrangements.
