University of Rhode Island

DigitalCommons@URI

Tomorrow is Not Promised

Dalia Rajeh
University of Rhode Island, daliarajeh10@gmail.com

Recommended Citation

Tomorrow is Not Promised

Dalia Rajeh, Biological Sciences
Sponsor: Zoey Stites, Art and Art History

The year 2020 affected many people all around the world. Many students had to learn to complete coursework remotely and graduating seniors lost the ending of their last year. With the COVID-19 pandemic we have seen how quickly our world can flip upside down. As a senior still living on campus, I noticed these changes within our campus firsthand. I wanted to capture the change in climate through photographs. The images you see here are photos within photos that show the comparison of what we used to call 'normal' and now our new normal. Over the course of the semester, these photos were rephotographed in the same location from pre-COVID years to now. These images compare what was with what is now, showcasing how drastically our definition of normal has changed. Many hated when the library was packed during finals or when the gym was full of people. Now we all wish for those times back. Through these images I hope you do not see a sad lifeless campus. I hope you take away that everything can change faster than we would hope. With the help of this project, I have learned to live in the moment, and I hope you do too.