Theta Rho

SECOND EPISTLE TO THE KINGSTONIANS.

Wherein all is lamented.

I. Awake! For now is the time of thy tribulation upon thee. Yea, even the Life in Death approacheth thee.

II. For know that for two long years hath the Secret Place of the Most High been secured from thy Chosen.

III. And for a year hath Saturnus that Ruled, and Somnus that Slumbered, and Gaulterius that plotted and two Sisters been taken from their midst.

IV. And De Cantii and Magnus and Amoesquos and the one Sister hath been sore pressed.

V. And hath added Accipitus, Circulus and Harrier, but great hath been their despair.

VI. Yea, even so great that the wrath of Theta Rho hath belched from the bowles of Davis.

VII. And great was the consternation and secret doings thereof.

VIII. For lo, thou risest, thou recitest, thou art trod upon, thou studiest, thou sleepest. Day after day. Week after week. Great is thy stagnation.

IX. For lo, those of empty heads and unseeing eyes do sore tax thee, even as did the Egyptians, the Israelites of old.

X. Gathering themselves together near the fifth hour afternoon of every Monday to plot against thee.

XI. But rise and rejoice! For the Theta Rho wast, ist, and shalt be. And great is Its wrath.

XII. Long have ye Chosen slept, but they wake. Soon shall the Five Plagues pester the Unseeing, if they be not warned. Amen.

Thus endeth the Epistle.
