A. Proposal

1. Concentration requirements:

A minimum of 30 credits including:

a. WMS 230 Introduction to Women's Studies 3 credits;

b. 3-credit statistics or methodology course approved by the Women's Studies Advisory Committee;

c. A 3-credit field experience in women's studies. The student may enroll in a departmental course, such as a practicum, clinic, honors program, independent study, or field work course with the approval of the Women's Studies Coordinator or may enroll in WMS 390 Field Experience in Women's Studies 3 credits;

d. WMS 400 Senior Seminar 3 credits;

e. 18 credits from the list below or from other courses (permanent, temporary, or open-ended) designated by the Women's Studies Advisory Committee as being appropriate to the concentration. The advisory committee will use the following guidelines in adding courses to the concentration courses which deal in a theoretical way with women or the interaction between women and men; or courses which concern major areas of women's lives (e.g. the family, sexual relations). Each semester the Women's Studies Advisory Committee will inform the Dean of the College of Arts and Sciences of any additional courses approved for the Women's Studies concentration. A majority of the credits must be selected from courses taught in the College of Arts and Sciences.

b. WMS 300 Field Experience in Women's Studies (11 and 11.1) Supervised field work allowing students to learn through direct personal experience about the background, problems and concerns of particular populations of women. (Lec. 1 Lab. 1) Pre: 200, approval of advisor Staff

c. WMS 400 Senior Seminar (11 or 11.1) Theoretical and value questions of Women's Studies research; general introduction to research methods; research methods in selected disciplines; personal and professional readiness. Not for graduate credit. (Lec. 1 Pre: 200, Senior standing Staff

3. Creation of Women's Studies Advisory Committee

That a Women's Studies Advisory Committee be appointed by the Dean of Arts and Sciences. The Committee shall comprise those faculty teaching Women's Studies Concentration courses (but no more than one faculty from each participating department) and three student concentrators. The Advisory Committee shall: interview Coordinator applicants and make a recommendation to the Dean of Arts and Sciences; be responsible for supervising those courses which are not departmental (i.e., those labeled WMS); evaluate the work of the Coordinator; and assist the Coordinator with the advisement of students and the development and coordination of the Women's Studies curriculum. The Women's Studies Advisory Committee shall be responsible for ongoing evaluations of the Women's Studies Program.

4. Creation of a Coordinator of Women's Studies

That there be a Coordinator of Women's Studies, appointed by the Dean of Arts and Sciences from the Arts and Sciences faculty. The Coordinator shall serve for two years and shall be accountable to an Advisory Committee and to the Dean of Arts and Sciences.

The Coordinator shall be released from one-half of her or his normal duties, which include, but are not re-restricted to teaching, research, advisement, committee work and thesis direction.

The duties of the Coordinator shall include the following:

a. Supervision of the over-all administration of the program, i.e., coordination and scheduling of all WMS courses not housed in existing departments, budget preparation, representing the program within the University community, e.g., at meetings of heads of departments, chairing the WMS Advisory Committee;

b. Student advisement (after the first year this duty will be shared with members of the WMS Advisory Committee), and coordination with suitable practicum and thesis advisors;

c. Coordination of programs and special events, including speakers, symposia, workshops;

d. Serving as community liaison and representative of the WMS program at regional and national conferences;

e. Facilitating student and faculty access to interdisciplinary materials, new scholarship, and conference information.

B. Rationale

1. Purpose

The central purpose of the program is to extend knowledge of the female experience, examined by means of both humanistic and scientific modes of analysis. The program would provide unity and coherence for the approximately two dozen courses focusing on women now offered by twelve departments. That these courses are meeting the needs and interest of students is evidenced by their high enrollments and by favorable responses in a recent survey of URI undergraduates designed by Kate Harion and conducted by the Student Opinion Index. Adults, especially women, returning to the Continuing Education Program have also indicated strong interest in Women's Studies.

A degree-granting program in Women's Studies at the University of Rhode Island would provide focus for, and coordination among, the various disciplines which make up the field. A formal program, first and foremost, reveals the intellectual and methodological relationships among the different areas of study; from this cross-pollination comes greater awareness of changes and developments in scholarship as well as wider opportunities for new research and ideas within a truly interdisciplinary field. At the same time, such a program permits concentrated student and faculty interchange, not fragmented by existing department boundaries. In addition to the focus offered by a degree-granting program, coordination of efforts and leadership would result from the presence of a visible structure with an administrative coordinator. The program would provide a base from which to propose grants, organize new courses, special events, and state-wide liaison with the community. Further, it would make visible and available to the state's academic and general population some of the University's special strengths, a notable example being its women's studies courses in the social sciences and humanities.

The major argument for such a program at the level of a major or concentration is based on the fact that the traditional disciplines have often failed to include women's contributions and concerns within their subject matters, except in the most cursory and peripheral ways. This is as true in art as in political science, in English literature as in biology. Psychologists have written primarily about the development of male personality, and sociologists about male institutions. In addition, sex-role stereotypes are perpetuated by our language, literature, news media and schools, with the consequence that many women are socialized to lead lives characterized by narrow expectations and incomplete or skewed development of capacities. Women need to discover their histories, to understand their potentials for growth and to learn to pursue scholarship in new and exciting research areas. Men will profit, too, from the new sources of knowledge about the world and our society and from having available first-rate scholars in this area with whom to study.
